

“Perennials” are interesting as most of them are blue, yellow, orange or pink. Perennials come back year after year and continue spreading their seeds and beauty. They do need to be pruned back at the end of the season.

Here are some types of Perennials:

| | |
|-----------------|--------------------|
| Agastache | Gloriosa Daisy |
| Aster | Indian Paint Brush |
| Bee Balm | Joy Pye Weed |
| Blanket Flower | Lobelia |
| Blazing Star | Mexican Hat |
| Blue Eyed Grass | Milkweed |
| Blue Flag Iris | Oriental Poppy |
| Blue Flax | Turtlehead |
| Butterfly Weed | Purple clover |
| Cardinal Flower | Soapwort |
| Columbine | Shooting Star |
| Echinacea | Wild Petunia |
| Goldenrod | |

“Biennials” are plants that live for only two years. During their first year they have foliage but no flowers. In the second year they bloom, set seeds then die. Their complete life-cycle is two years.

Here are some types of Biennials:

| | |
|------------------|-------------------|
| Black-eyed Susan | Hollyhock |
| Canterbury Bells | Queen Anne’s Lace |
| Dame’s Rocket | Sweet William |
| Evening Primrose | |

Lady Bird Johnson may have said it best with her heartfelt words about wildflowers: “Almost every person from childhood on, has been touched by the untamed beauty of wildflowers. Buttercup gold under a childish chin, the single drop of exquisite sweetness in the blossom of wild honeysuckle, the love-me, love-me-not philosophy of daisy petals.”

Wildflowers have certainly been an essential element in my life. I still have that “Golden Nature Guide” (it cost me a hard earned $1 selling chicken eggs) and that Brownie camera (now on display on my collectibles shelf) but most of all I still have the passion for wildflowers. My wildflower garden has been sown and I look forward to sharing photos with you once the blooming begins.

Spring forward and enjoy the outdoors. Plant a wildflower meadow.
