Team-living PODs provide young adults with supportive environment

By Diane Claytor

www.lamorindaweekly.com

Tuesday nights at the Team Living PODs means one of the residents is cooking dinner for his fellow PODsters. Photo provided am, a bright, articulate 25-year-ferences, learning disabilities or old from Danville who request- basic fear of the unknown; many ed we not use his last name, admits have felt the need to isolate themto having had a difficult time dur- selves in order to remain safe. "We ing his younger years. Diagnosed understand that each individual is a with both depression and anxiety, it whole, perfect person in an imperwas hard for him to make friends. fect, judgmental world ... a world He was always nervous. And, he that does not always understand said, "when there is a strain on one that accommodations and strucaspect of your life, other areas like ture are necessary," Meg Fields school and family relationships can stated. The PODs offer a comfortcrumble too." He found himself able environment where life skills lacking direction and realizing that needed for independent living can things needed to change. Sam's not alone. According to nurturing is emphasized so frienda 2015 National Institute of Men-ships can be formed, self-esteem number that has been steadily in- forward," she noted. creasing.

American Psychological Association reports 1 in 68 children are diagnosed as being on the autism spectrum (complex disorders of brain development characterized by varying degrees of difficulties in social interaction, communication to college but without a parent or and repetitive behavior).

Aspen Network, an organization helping young adults with social live a better and fuller life.

The Aspen Network was founded nine years ago by Meg Fields, articulate former Aspen Network who holds a doctorate in clinical resident who recently moved from psychology and spent more than the POD to his own apartment -20 years as a psychiatric emergen- but returns frequently to see his cy room nurse, and her husband, friends. The 29-year-old, who Mike, who has been an emergency preferred we not use his name, at-Wanting to provide a safe and ac- to discover that an AA degree cepting place for young people "wouldn't get me very far. I went with social challenges, anxiety disorders and spectrum behaviors, Aspen Network offers programs for teens and young adults, enabling them to learn and grow with peers of their own in a comfortable and welcoming environment.

There are adventure-filled overnight retreats in Tahoe; One-on-One Coaching designed to help create goals and make next-step plans; and a weekly Living Skills Group, ing your comfort zone a bit but not offering a safe space to share and learn. The newest program - the Team-Living PODs – offers co-ed tense but positive and productive. residential living for young adults His 18-year-old friend, Jennifer, an 18 years and older.

orinda hills, a group of Team-Livwith a warm, inviting atmosphere.

be learned and mutual respect and tal Health report, 6.3 million teens can increase and "our young people suffer from an anxiety disorder, a can realize their potential to move

Meg Fields explained that many Another rising statistic: the of the PODsters drive, go to work, to school; she explained that they're frequently the people who did well in school but "get missed. They're often lacking in certain skills: organizing, prioritizing, remembering, observing, planning." They go off teacher guiding or assisting when Fortunately for Sam, and others they hit those proverbial bumps, like him, there is the Orinda-based they're unable to succeed. "They may begin to unravel and depression and anxiety peak," commented and behavioral difficulties learn to Liz Wilson-Palmer, an Aspen Network transition specialist.

This is what happened to J, an room nurse for more than 15 years. tended community college, only home and collapsed," spending most of his time alone in his room. He became a PODster, making friends and achieving goals. "The people, structure, community and group living provided a lot of positive experiences," J said. "There's just enough structure without being intrusive or overbearing. The program is very good at pushing you just to your limit, maybe stretchbending you so far that you break."

J described the program as in-

Palmer agreed, noting that many cess and giving me more confi-"simply need that extra scaffolding dence allows me to branch out in to support them." For those that other aspects of my life. [Aspen need it, basic daily living skills are Network] gave me that first push. built into Aspen Network's pro- They don't guide you every step gram. "Some need to be reminded of the way; it's more like they give to change their linens," Meg Fields you a kick in the right direction," stated, "or take a shower." Grocery he said. shopping, cooking lessons, laundry training, and money management another residence to provide transeducation are all offered.

ville, has been a PODster for three areas," Meg Fields said. Wilson- proclaiming that "having that suc-

The Fields will soon be opening formative experiences for more Sam, the young man from Dan- young people with social or behavioral challenges. For information, years. He landed a job he enjoyed, please go to aspennetwork.net.

